Significance

Statement Of Significance

The Seven Hills Railway Station platform buildings are a remaining representative example of a series of war time/post war Art Deco building upgrades along the Blacktown line from Toongabbie to Mt Druitt in the early 1950’s. The Seven Hills Station is a later version of the group using the style and planning but simplifying to a more modern appearance indicating a 1960’s development.

Criteria a)

Historical Significance

Criteria c)

Aesthetic/Technical Significance

The Seven Hills Railway Station has significance as an identifiable part of the Toongabbie – Mt Druitt Group, but the styling has been modernised toward a later P and O style.

Physical Description

Updated

Seven Hills Railway Station is a brick square form building of a similar pattern and style to Rooty Hill, although interpreted into a more modern form. Edges are more squared than rounded as in the earlier Art Deco stations.

History

Historical Notes or Provenance

Updated

The Railway Line was first extended to Blacktown in 1860. It was extended to Rooty Hill in 1861 and Richmond in 1864. The Main Western Line was extended to Penrith in 1867 and into the Blue Mountains to Wentworth Falls in 1868. The first platform at Seven Hills was established in 1869. There are no buildings remaining from this period. The current station appears in a photo of a major train derailment in 1960, indicating it had been completed before that date.
